Nicholas Martin is a conflict resolution consultant residing near Dallas, Texas. He is a nationally published author and a very popular conference presenter, with a background in clinical psychology and in court and postal service mediation. He has been providing community and staff-development training for over 30 years and has taught dispute resolution at the graduate school level. In response to a growing demand, Nick has come to focus increasingly on school-parent collaboration in special education. His emphasis is always on making the complex simple and on offering practical skills for making a positive difference. His published works include Supporting the IEP Process – A Facilitator's Guide, A Guide to Collaboration for IEP Teams, An Operator's Manual for Successful Living, and Strengthening Relationships When Our Children Have Special Needs (also available in Spanish).
